

Type

For this item, indicate the type of graffiti observed. The first three categories are forms of name-based graffiti.

1: Tag

A tag is the simplest form of name-based graffiti and may or may not be readable to outsiders. The emphasis is on rapid execution. The writer's pseudonym is formed into a logo or monogram using stylised letters.

2: Throw-up

A throw-up is somewhat more complex than a tag, while still emphasising speed of execution. It often consists of two-dimensional, bubble-style letters applied with a minimum amount of paint. An outline shows only the edges of the throw-up. In a fill-in, the letters are filled with loose strokes.

3: Piece

A piece (short for masterpiece) is a large, elaborate and multicoloured work. As the most complex form of name-based graffiti, the promotion of the pseudonym remains central, unlike in illustrative work. The work must therefore contain an elaborated pseudonym.

4: Stencil

A stencil is produced by spraying paint through a template. In this case, the medium determines the form. If option 3: Stencil was selected under C. Medium, select this option here as well.

5: Illustration (not a piece/stencil)

An illustration is a drawing that does not emphasise the promotion of a pseudonym, as a piece does. When a pseudonym is accompanied by illustrations, select option 3: Piece. If the illustration was applied using a stencil, select option 4: Stencil.

6: Slogan

A slogan is applied with the intention of communicating a message. Its content may vary widely, from anarchist statements to personal attacks. Select this option whenever the graffiti communicates a message that does not fall under name-based graffiti (categories 1-3).

Important: the following texts are always classified as slogans: "ACAB" and "1312".

7: Other

Classify observed graffiti that does not fall under any of the categories above as Other, followed by a description of the graffiti concerned.

If there is uncertainty about the type of graffiti, the category with the lowest number takes precedence.

Example: if you are uncertain whether the graffiti is a tag or a throw-up, select tag.
